"FRIENDSHIP" NOW A T SOUTHAMPTON AFTER OCEAN HOP

"Glad It Is Over," Says Stultz, Who Welcomes The Rest

FOUND FOGS HEAVY

Miss Earhart Happy to Be
First Woman to Make The Trip

By J. C. Oestreicher
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
SOUTHAMPTON, Eng., June 19—(INS)—Miss Amelia Earhart, of Boston, the first woman to span the Atlantic by airplane, and her two companions—Pilot Wilmer Stultz and Mechanic Louis Gordon—reached the goal of their daring trans-ocean flight here this afternoon in the monoplane Friendship. The plane dropped upon the surface of the harbor shortly before 1.30 p. m., English summer time. Stultz expressed the sentiments of the other flyers when he exclaimed: "I certainly am glad it is over. Now for a good rest."

The Friendship had hopped off at Barry Inlet, on the South Wales coast, at 11.07 conveyed by an Imperial Airways plane carrying Capt. H. H. Bailey, European representative of the Friendship's overseas flight.

The Friendship arrived here at 1.17 p. m., but did not descend immediately. It began circling over the harbor while Pilot Stultz picked out a suitable spot to come down.

The Friendship alighted upon the water at 1.23 o'clock and was immediately moored.

LONDON, June 19—(INS)—The Friendship monoplane left Barry port at 1.07 p. m. (7.07 New York daylight time) according to word reaching here. The plane piloted by Wilmer Stultz with Lou Gordon aboard as mechanic, and Miss Amelia Earhart, first woman to fly across the Atlantic by air, was accompanied by an Imperial Airways plane.

The Friendship was expected at Southampton between 1.30 and 1.35 p. m.

The fliers greeted newspapermen who had waited all night to see them and revealed additional details of their epic journey.

Stultz piloted the plane all the way across. They ran into heavy fogs soon after reaching the middle of the Atlantic and flew blind from there on.

The fog was so heavy they seldom caught a glimpse of the ocean below. They ran into several rain storms and some snow flurries. When about twelve hours out, their radio went dead.

They pushed onward and at 4.30 a. m. (New York daylight time), sighted the liner America. They circled the ship several times and dropped notes to the captain asking him to point his ship in the direction of Southampton.

They were then at a loss for their exact whereabouts and their fuel was fast disappearing. But the notes never reached the America's captain as the wind caught them up.

They continued onward and passed over Ireland without seeing it because of the fog. Then they sighted land and swooped earthward with hardly a gallon of fuel in the tanks, landing here safely, thankful and happy.

LANGHORNE SCOUTS WILL SEE GETTYSBURG FROM AIR

Expect to Visit Battlefield on Thursday and Friday,
June 28 and 29

WON RECENT CONTEST

LANGHORNE, June 19.—Eight scouts from this borough are anxiously awaiting the 28th and 29th of June—for on those days some of the members will probably have the opportunity of seeing Gettysburg from the air.

During the month of May the Langhorne troop of Boy Scouts of America won the county championship of the meet at Perkasie in which troops from every section of the county vied for honors.

Because of their prowess Langhorne lads will be represented by a selected patrol of eight boys from the group for this week-end trip. At the Gettysburg gathering there will be patrols from every section of Pennsylvania. Each patrol will go through a period of inspection, and their paraphernalia will be examined. Cooking tests will be given and a long hike indulged in.

Each patrol will be given a rating at the Gettysburg affair, and the Langhorne lads are hoping to make a good record when they are pitted against the pick of the state.

County Executive William Livermore and Langhorne Scoutmaster Joseph W. Lindenfelser will accompany the octette, and the trip will be made in automobiles. It is being planned to afford some of the lads from the various patrols an opportunity of taking an airplane trip, in order that they might see the battlefield from the air.

The eight who have been selected from this borough for the trip are: William Stark, Lorenz Foster, Carl Bazzie, Robert Siddle, Lester Mather, James Townsend, Horace Tomlinson and Marple Ambler. Of this group William Stark, who is senior patrol leader, will be acting patrol leader of the group. Lorenz Foster will be assistant patrol leader for the two days' journey.

The Langhorne troop consists now of 29 boys, all of whom show a marked interest in scouting under the direction of Mr. Lindenfelser. They are very proud of their five bugles and three drummers, who are of valuable assistance.

FUTURE OF ROTARY DOES NOT LIE IN ITS SIZE, PRESIDENT OF ORGANIZATION TELLS MEMBERS IN OPENING ADDRESS AT CONVENTION

One Hundred Thousand Members Gained in Last Decade;
Seven Times as Many Clubs as Ten Years Ago;
2,900 Clubs Are Represented

(Special to Courier)
MINNEAPOLIS, June 19.—A world vision of usefulness was presented to the thousands of Rotarians from all over the world, assembled in the municipal auditorium today for their nineteenth international convention, in the keynote address of Arthur H. Sapp, of Huntington, Indiana, international president.

For several days the throngs of delegates, representing nearly 2,900 Rotary clubs in 44 countries, have been flocking to Minneapolis, and the vast convention hall was packed to capacity today when business session of the convention began with the speech of President Sapp on "Rotary Today and Tomorrow."

"The fact that Rotary has among its members kings, princes, presidents, men high in church and state in every nation, is but an indication of the latent possibilities in touching directly, through the business and professional men of these nations, every walk of life, high and low," said Pres. Sapp. "Rotary shall wield a powerful influence for good, if that influence maintains its integrity with unselfish purpose, which will truly help to bring about a new and blessed relationship among all men."

The future of Rotary does not lie in its size, continued President Sapp, although there has been a gain of 100,000 members in the past decade, and there are nearly seven times as many clubs as there were ten years ago. He quoted a famous remark of Lloyd George, that the private soldier in the steel helmet really won the world war, to emphasize that the future of Rotary must rest upon the individual member and his response to Rotary's ideals of service.

"We have today," said President Sapp, "the inspiration which comes when men gather together for a common purpose from the ends of the earth. At first our conventions were largely inspirational. The early leaders of Rotary were searching through the idealism of service for standards to which to attain."

"Today our conventions, which have grown to enormous proportions, are giving supreme thought to peace time projects—definite plans to carry out the aims and ideals of Rotary with a forward looking view to a world vision of usefulness."

"Fellowship and inspiration are and always will be prominent in our gatherings, but there is a seriousness present today which demands a practical working program. Experience has shown the wisdom of devoting largely of our time to assemblies for the frank and free discussion of the aims and objects of Rotary. This year we have multiplied those assemblies in the hope that by subdividing the subjects the groups may be smaller and each one of you may be given an opportunity to join in the discussions with a freedom and earnestness that shall bring new ideas to our problems, and new energy to carry forward the activities fostered by Rotary.

"The background of Rotary is such a brief span as history goes. It is idle to boast of our phenomenal growth and also idle to boast that Rotary is a panacea for all ills. It has grown to its present position for two reasons. First, Rotary ideals justified its existence, and these ideals are just as fresh today as they were in the beginning. Second, Rotary activities and objectives have been sane and wholesome. Men's lives have been quickened to a zeal to be helpful to others. Numbers mean opportunity—opportunity demands service."

"What is the genius of Rotary that it means so much to us and is truly taking such a lead in the affairs of men? We should, of course, be exercised about what the critics say of Rotary. No great movement ever escaped the critics. There has been much talk of counter propaganda, but wisely little has been done about it. The way to stop criticism is so to live that the criticism falls of its own weight. There is much loose Rotary talk by Rotarians, simply because we do not know our Rotary. Claims are made that are at once false and foolish. The real problem in Rotary today is not 'what do men say that Rotary is' but 'what do you of Rotary say that it is?'

"Often we have been embarrassed in trying to define Rotary and frequently we have fallen back on the old phrase, 'It can't be defined; it must be lived.' This is in fact the answer. Rotarians must of necessity live right and then all the criticism of the world will fall flat and be unavailing."

"The emphasis by Rotary upon service through vocation has had a distinct effect upon present day civilization. No greater service can be done to the world at large than by Rotarians constantly emphasizing the higher standards of business practice."

"If Rotary had made no greater contribution to the world than her Boys' Work contribution, she would have justified all of the time and effort expended in her twenty-three and a half years of existence. Let our Boys' Work go on with ever increasing emphasis, not as the sole and only object of Rotary, but as one of its prized offspring."

"The same may be said of our work for crippled children. Through the efforts of Rotarians the International

IMPROVED HOMES ARE PLANNED BY P. O. S. OF A.

Past President Moyer Tells of Aim at Care for Dependents

FEW THOUSAND ATTEND

DOYLESTOWN, June 19.—Addressing several thousand persons from three States at the reunion of the Patriotic Order of Sons of America, Saturday, at Chalfont, Gabriel H. Moyer, of Lebanon, told of plans for "greater Sons of America homes."

The reunion was held at the orphan's home, one of the two supported by the P. O. S. of A. The other home is for older folk and is located in Chalfont borough, where sixty-nine are permanent guests. Thirty-three young people are in the orphan's home.

Saturday's reunion marked the culmination of seven years' effort on the part of A. J. Arbogast, of Philadelphia, a member of the board of directors of the home and chairman of the reunion day committee, to have the two Chalfont homes nationalized.

It was announced by Arbogast and Past National President Moyer that the two homes that were started twenty-two years ago and have been supported since that time by an independent group of 260 camps composed of 50,000 members will be purchased during the next few months by the national organization.

The Chalfont homes will be made the center of the charitable interests of all the P. O. S. of A. lodges in the United States after April 1, 1929, and will be supported by a membership of 200,000 in 1,500 camps.

An inspection was made of the 150 acres owned by the order, including the old folks home, the orphanage, the Emmett B. Berger Memorial School and the large and modern farm buildings.

"We are looking forward to the day in the very near future when the P. O. S. of A. camps throughout the United States will be able to expand the Sons of America homes and will have accommodations for hundreds of old folks and orphans," Past President Moyer said.

ABANDONED FARMS

A Dartmouth College professor in studying the history of a rural section in New Hampshire discovered more than a hundred abandoned houses and sites where houses once stood. He also learned that the surrounding hills now feed but 1 per cent of the number of sheep that once grazed upon them, and that deserted farms dot the countryside.

New Hampshire is not alone in the possession of deserted villages and "dead" farms. They can be found in every New England state and in most other states. They are the cause of considerable concern and represent great financial loss to their former owners, but nothing could have been done to prevent it.

Farms are not abandoned by accident. Some have ceased to be productive. Many were able to produce a poor living for a family when there was less competition and it cost less to live. Today it requires agricultural genius to make a good living on the best farm. And the opening of more fertile lands through irrigation and transportation has taken thousands from barren, worn-out farms.

There is no cause for great concern in the presence of these depopulated rural sections. At their best they produced little and what was lost through their abandonment was more than made up by the greatly increased production of the good farm. Had there been a need for their output they would still be under cultivation. Even without their crops the nation is producing more farm products than it can consume with a fair margin of profit for the farmer.

City folk are thankful for the abandoned farms. They make ideal hunting grounds and camp and cottage sites. And conservationists see in them the "tree farms" of tomorrow.

EVOLUTION OF WORDS

Nothing is more interesting than etymology or the origin of words. There is a great deal more to words than their mere use. Study of the origin of the costume vocabulary reveals many curious facts.

Of course the panama hat takes its name from the country of its origin. The cap came from "cappa" or cape. The hero of Burns' poem gave his name to the "tam o'shanter."

That convenient garment, the jumper, derived its suggestive appellation from the fact that its wearer jumped into it. The expression "short skirt" is tautological, since skirt is derived from "skyrtia," meaning short.

"Knickerbocker" comes from knickerbocker, a name given the peculiar type of trousers or bloomers worn by "Diedrich Knickerbocker," the pretended author of Irving's "History of New York."

The petticoat is only a petty or small coat. A garter is that which is placed around the "garter" or shank of the leg. "Spats" is a contraction of "spatter dashes," an eighteenth century gaiter. It is clearly seen how "napoleon," a cloth or tablecloth, has become "apron" through frequent usage and not too careful articulation.

And even the word "costume" is nothing more than a derivative of "custom," a costume being something customarily worn.

A man seldom considers his experience worth all it cost.

In the school of experience the course is never completed.

Buckwell attempts to wreck their love affair. Vasquez dies of stroke when Buckwell threatens to dispossess him. Dolores and Terry expose Buckwell as Chinaman to avenge Vasquez's death. Dolores joins Buckwell and exposes him to other bosses. Terry is freed but Buckwell escapes into underworld, forcing Dolores with him.

And in the very heart of this underground community was a meeting place reserved for a chosen few, for the minority whose worldly wealth had reached the point where it could buy whatever the heart desired. Guarded approaches from a dozen directions, like the spokes of a wheel, with this shrine of evil mystery as the hub. "The Shrine of the Golden Door" it was called. But to those denizens of the underworld who were not permitted to enter its sacred and mysterious interior it had been dubbed "The Den of a Thousand Sins." As apt an expression as could be found.

What mad notion possessed Buckwell; when he escaped from the wrath of the bosses and the Chinamen he had wronged, forcing Dolores to go with him; he probably did not know himself. His most urgent idea was to flee. But where? He tried to decide as he and San

The grinning face of a Chinaman leered at her.

Toy alternately pushed and pulled Dolores along the dimly lighted passage that led from the back of his private shrine. The power of the long leaders was great. The long arm of their authority reached to the innermost depths of the underworld. No place was safe from their prying eyes.

No place save one. Buckwell's eyes lighted with keen anticipation as he thought of "The Den of a Thousand Sins." Here he would be safe. Not even the influence of the long leaders was great enough for them to violate the sacred laws of their shrine, that gave protection to all who were within its walls. He smiled eagerly as he urged Dolores to a greater haste. What would happen after he left its protecting walls was another matter, but that evil day would be postponed as long as possible.

They emerged from the narrow passage along which they had been traveling and entered a broader one that was evidently a main thoroughfare for the net work of smaller ones that led into it. Here for the first time they encountered some of the dwellers of this underground city. Slant eyed Celestials shuffling along gazed at them curiously, but no one accosted them or offered to interfere in any way.

Dolores was half dead with terror and weariness. Her tired brain was in a daze. The events of the last day passed before her like the phantasy of a fevered dream. She tried to struggle from Buckwell's grasp, but her feeble strength was not equal to the task. With a sob of resignation she permitted herself to be dragged along.

Presently they turned aside from the main passage and entered a narrow one that wound so tortuously it was impossible to tell the direction in which they were going. Suddenly an iron door blocked their progress. Buckwell tapped on its surface in queer fashion. A small panel opened and the wrinkled features of an old Chinese woman peered out at them. She recognized Buckwell and without delay opened the door for them to enter.

A carpeted passageway faced them. This widened gradually until it disappeared entirely into a huge semi-circular room luxuriously fur-

Future of Rotary Not in Its Size, Pres. Tells Members

Society for Crippled Children has become a tremendous force. Let interest in this work increase until in a few years a crippled adult may be a rare sight in any city. Interest in student loan funds is growing, and providing a splendid service. Community service is as broad as the community itself and a good Rotarian will find his place in helpful activity for the betterment of his community.

President Sapp then described his trips of the past year into seventeen different countries, visiting hundreds of Rotary clubs, and gave as his impression the statement that "truly we have come into a new era of friendship between men." "International friendships grow and spread," he said, "until they form the nuclei for ever widening groups, and it is not too much to hope that Rotary's sixth object, universal understanding and international peace, shall be greatly advanced by this fellowship."

"What is the future of Rotary? We have asked ourselves this question again and again. Whenever I have doubts in my mind as to Rotary's worthwhile place in the world, I seek out some man of affairs who is not a Rotarian and ask him whether he has had any contact with the Rotary movement and what is his estimate of its place in the world. If he is a man who has recently traveled at all extensively, or who has made intelligent observations of our organization in his own country, the answer invariably gives me encouragement."

"Just recently I called upon two such men. One was a distinguished statesman, the other a great churchman. Both have the broadest international contacts. The statesman said of Rotary, 'I believe that this organization will in the future have a remarkable influence in bringing understanding among the nations.' The churchman said, 'I look upon Rotary as I have seen it in India, Australia and America, as one of the greatest opportunities for good the world has seen. It will have a great influence in the future of civilization.'"

"It is such words of praise as these that give us heart for the ultimate result of our efforts. I sometimes feel that we do not appreciate the dignified place which Rotary holds in the world. The fact that Rotary has among its members kings, princes, presidents, men high in church and state in every nation where Rotary abounds, is but an indication of the latent possibilities in touching directly through the business and professional men of these nations, every walk of life, high or low, every type of endeavor, until Rotary will wield a powerful influence for good, which, if that influence maintains its integrity with unselfish purpose, will truly help to bring about a new and blessed relationship among all men."

"It is easy for us to deal in generalities, to think in terms of distances, of numbers and enlarged dimensions. The future of Rotary does not lie in her size or the gigantic proportions of her endeavor. The emphasis must come back and be placed squarely upon the individual. The future of Rotary, therefore, is going to depend upon the future Rotarian. If that Rotarian of the future lives up to his ideals and his opportunities and faces the world and her responsibilities with courage, with conviction and with an unselfish devotion to duty, the future of Rotary is secure."

As a sample of unselfish service to humanity, President Sapp concluded with the story of a man in his own home town of Huntington, Indiana, John Kissinger, the unknown and unsung hero who offered his life during the Spanish-American war for the investigation and cure of the yellow fever epidemic. Kissinger volunteered to allow infected mosquitoes to bite him, proving that the disease was transmitted in that fashion, and although his life was saved, he was a wreck of his former self when discharged from the army. The surgeon who shared his sacrifice died. Eventually his heroism was recognized and he was given a little chicken farm and a veteran's pension.

"John Kissinger rendered to the world a supreme service," said President Sapp. "He made life in the tropics possible because of his sacrifice and unselfish service. That masterpiece of modern engineering, the Panama Canal, was completed. After all, the principle of service may be collective in its processes, but of necessity it goes back to the individual. 'He Profits Most Who Serves Best' is nicely summed up in the Spanish proverb, 'Who would bring home the wealth of the Indies must carry the wealth of the Indies with him.'"

Breakfast assemblies of Rotary leaders in various activities began the working program of the convention Tuesday morning, bringing together the district governors, club presidents, secretaries and club publication editors, and the convention song leaders. Homer Rodeheaver, the world-famous leader of community singing, organized his assistants at one of these meetings, to handle the singing of a monster choir of more than 12,000 Rotarians and their families. The magnificent new organ in the municipal auditorium provided the music for this great chorus throughout the convention sessions.

Dr. E. Leslie Pidgeon, pastor of the Erskine Church of Montreal, Canada, led the opening assemblage in prayer, and the annual memorial service for Rotarians who have passed to the great beyond followed. Secretary Chesley R. Perry and Treasurer Rufus Chapin presented their annual reports, after President Sapp's address.

"We are going to the hills," said Paul P. Harris of Chicago, president-elect and founder of Rotary, in his annual message. "The Creator must have had man's welfare in mind when He gave him hills to climb; dead levels are monotonous, yet they serve to throw in bold relief the hills we have to climb. A generation ago hill-top men were all to be found in the ranks of the reformers. Then came the day when the dead level men paid a visit to the hills and gazed skyward. Business, while noting the insufficiencies of the reformer, has nevertheless been impressed with their high-mindedness and has resolved to create a reformation of its own. In the vanguard of the movement, Rotary has taken its place."

Welcoming the new clubs in the four countries into which Rotary has gone in the past year, President Sapp extended greetings to the new Rotarians represented by their delegates, and Dr. Wilhelm Cuno, president of the Rotary club of Hamburg, Germany, responded in the name of all the new countries.

CUNO'S INS SPEECH HERE
General sessions of the convention Monday afternoon were to outline to the various group assemblies the chief topics for discussion of the aims and objects plan of Rotary and how to make it work.
